WebParentTip. Volume 8, special for 11-28-07

I have two announcements for my readers.

1) ParentKidsRight.com has a new feature. When you click on the Home Page you will find an up-to-the-minute feed of all my published writings including my weekly parenting column. I hope you find this useful.

2) The Metropolitan Opera of New York has expanded the wonderful live outreach program it started last year. In many communities in the US, and in a few other countries, you will be able to watch a LIVE production of an opera from the Met in HD at a local movie theater. Go to MetOpera.org to locate a theater near you and get a schedule for the 8 operas that will be simulcast from the Metropolitan Opera house..

Although the other operas will be shown on a Saturday, Hansel and Gretel will air on Tuesday, January 1, 2008 at 1 pm EST. This was the first opera I was taken to when I was 4. I still remember it and still go to every opera I can. I took my granddaughter to the Met when she was 7 and she loved it. We have both been back. Hansel and Gretel would be a great way to introduce your child to opera and expand your child's horizons at a relatively low cost.
